The current global pandemic and frequent emergence of drug resistance in microbes have revealed how vulnerable we are as a system against invading microbial organisms. Thus, it is very important to understand the dynamic interactions between microorganisms and their hosts for our survival.

We are extremely delighted to host the second series of webinar on "Host-Microbe Interaction". This webinar brings together scientists from different spectrum of biology spanning from immunology, cell biology, parasitology, and vector biology to plant microbiology under one umbrella who will talk about the cutting edge research on microbial interactions with their associated hosts (animals and humans) along with its future directions and challenges.

Registration is Free

Participants will receive e-certificates after filling the feedback form
